Overview

GSA is the U.S. General Services Administration, a federal agency. Under the GSA Schedule program, GSA's Federal Acquisition Service negotiates contracts which authorized buyers order from at pre-negotiated prices and terms.

A U.S. Government buyer has a wide array of contract types available for the purchase of goods and services. This includes sealed bidding, set-asides, negotiated procurements, and "other than full and open competition", frequently known as sole source. However, one of the easiest procedures for a federal buyer to use is the GSA multiple award schedule. Since it is pre-negotiated, a GSA Schedule allows a buyer to conduct a competition more efficiently and expeditiously than through any other competitive procedure. GSA Schedules are also based on a company's commercial sales and discounting practices, making them the most "commercial-like" of any government contracts.

Who Can Order?

All Federal Government agencies, quasi-federal agencies and government contractors purchasing in support of government funded projects.
